THE SPIRIT OF

76

by JOHN CLINTON

Don't look now, but ovate spheroid time is nearly here. In other words, football season's just around the corner.

(Ovate spheroid is something fancy sport scribes dreamed up when they got tired talking about pigskins, swineskins and plain old footballs.)

Anyway, Old John, famed in his day as "Killer Clinton," captain of the parchesi team and All-American Sunday morning quarterback, is all set for the season.

I bought my season ticket and fixed it with the boss so I get a long week-end off to drive to The Big Game — the one they talk about in capital letters.

So for me there's only one bad thing about a football day left: Traffic Nerves. By the time my alma mater has risked her all on an end-around, and defied existing laws of probability with long passes, the Clinton nerves are a mess. And then there's the after-game traffic!

But Union has done a lot to lick that problem with New 76 Gasoline. It is, as you know, especially designed for traffic driving. Now don't get me wrong. New 76 is no aspirin tablet. But it does do away with one of the chief causes of Traffic Nerves which, scientists say, is poor gasoline performance.

But suppose we quit talking about it, and you try one tankful. That's the best way to find out. And I think if you'll do that, you'll stay with New 76 from now on. It's certainly worth trying.

Mr. Roy N. Vernstrom
Editor, OLD OREGON
Eugene, Oregon, U. S. A.

Dear Sir:

Your letter of July 22 last has been received, and in compliance with your request, I take pleasure in sending you, herein enclosed, an article entitled "A Far Eastern Report." Upon assumption of the office as Foreign Minister of Japan, I feel I should report to my Alma Mater, and I thank you for the opportunity you have kindly given me to do so through the OLD OREGON, every issue of which, let me tell you, I do not fail to read and really enjoy it as an alumnus of the State University of Oregon.

The article, I am afraid, does not correspond to what you have asked me to write. Nevertheless, you Americans should know what we are actually doing and really intend to do out here. There are gross misapprehension and misgivings on your part. Unless I can correct them, I do not see how I can profitably approach the question of righting the relations between our two countries.

I hardly need to tell you that nothing is more welcome and encourages me more than the cheerings and congratulations that come across the Pacific from the Oregon Alumni.

Yes, Ambassador Grew is doing splendidly and is liked and respected in Japan. He certainly represents your country with the best American tradition and that with honor and distinction.

Please convey my warmest greetings to all of the Oregon Alumni and to Alma Mater.

Yours truly,

Y. Matsuoka, '00.

(Ed.: Double-spread on pages six and seven, this issue, are two articles currently wealthy with news. One is by Yosuke Matsuoka, LL.B. '00, Foreign Minister of Japan; the other, by Minoru Yasui, '37, LL.B. '39, now with the Consulate General of Japan in Chicago. Both writers responded to editorial requests for the stories.)

The Cover in Words

Photo Bureau Manager J. Warren Teeter clicked this pictorial comment of Freshman Coach John Warren following a fracture that spelled "nix" to jitterbugging a while.

Taken in Eugene, the exposure took place when "Honest John" was freighted to a party by friends—many who are Oregon Alumni—when his feet failed him. Recognizable are several members of the faculty and their wives.

Captioned "Friend of Freshmen" is an article appearing in this issue of OLD OREGON applauding Warren as a coach and personality.

Homecoming Hastened By ELMER FANSETT, '28

Second in command, 116th Medical Regiment, Camp Murray, Washington, is the new position of Alumni Association President Delbert Stanard, '14, M.D. '21. Called to duty with the National Guard, the Doctor answers to the appellation, Major, on the Fort Lewis grounds. Hollis Johnston, ex-'21, vice-president, has accepted the position of acting Alumni head during the remainder of Stanard's term. The Portland architect has among his activities plans for Homecoming's Association meeting on the campus Saturday morning, November 9. OLD OREGON'S next issue will be devoted to this annual event, its program and committees. Alumni Secretary Elmer Fansett, '28, adroitly mixes pleas and challenges in this article to readers who wonder what is happening in their Alma Mater world.—Ed.

Homecoming, November 9, marks the near completion of a first year's operation under our new county directorship organization. It has been a successful year as evidenced by the increased interest in the University from the Alumni. Better attendance at meetings has been noted everywhere. More requests have been received for programs to be presented before Alumni groups. Office correspondence has continually increased with a noticeable addition of members. Even in the face of uncertain times, the University has felt enrollment grow two per cent above last year's all time high.

These facts mark progress and are directly due to the efforts of President Delbert Stanard, Vice-president Hollis Johnston and their board of county directors. Each alumnus of the University has an equity in this organization and it will only be as strong as the members make it. Your directors are representing you and they need your help and suggestions in order to represent you properly.

DIRECTOR VACANCIES

A complete list of directors appears in every issue of OLD OREGON (inside front cover). There are vacancies on the board for the following counties: Columbia, Jefferson, Marion, Morrow and Wallawa. Members of the Association in these counties are asked to send in names of Alumni who are interested and willing to serve in the capacity of directors.

On several occasions the Association has been referred to as a "clique" or "closed corporation" composed of a group of individuals who "want to run the show." The Association has continually sought for ways and means to interest more and more Alumni in taking active part in the affairs of the group. The new county directorship system is an attempt to do just this. These directors will hold an important meeting on November 9 to consider the phases of the University program and problems in which you are interested. If there is something you would like to have discussed by the board please convey your wish to your county director.

You are also urged to attend and take part in the annual meeting of the Alumni Association on the campus the morning of Saturday, November 9. Your directors

Gurley Appointed

Oregon's student body executive committee, meeting in session October 8, picked Joe Gurley of Oregon City as general chairman for Homecoming this year. An experienced publicity man, the senior in journalism should prove an outstanding appointee.

With Homecoming slated for November 9, the next issue of OLD OREGON will go through the mails on the first of the month. In that issue will be a Homecoming history and other features tending to inform Oregon Alumni about the annual celebration.

The general chairman, who was press agent for the Clackamas County Fair last summer, will work in conjunction with the Alumni Association secretary and the student body. A member of the Oregon Federation directorate, Gurley recently completed a successful job as athletic card drive chairman.

will report on topics discussed in the directors' meeting. You will be encouraged to take part in all such discussions with the hope that we can better our organization through sincere analysis of programs that will best serve the welfare of the University of Oregon.

ANNUAL MEETING

The order of business will include nominations for the offices of president and vice-president for the coming year. Canvass the Oregon Alumni in your county and if you find persons who are able and willing to serve their University in either one of these capacities, see that they are nominated.

One of the first duties of the newly elected president will be to fill the vacancies on the board created by expirations of terms. This new president will need your help in making the best possible selections. It is not too early to start thinking about persons who might serve in such a capacity.

This is your organization and you will be credited with its success and charged with its weaknesses. So, please plan to attend and take part in the annual meeting. We need your suggestions in order to make the Oregon Alumni Association a truly great organization capable of serving the University in every conceivable way.

Alumni President Del Stanard drops active control of executive position as he accepts title of Major, Medical Corps, for year of duty at Camp Murray.

Friend of Freshmen

By BOB FLAVELLE, '41

Hitting the headlines is not uncommon for Oregon's freshman coach, John Albert Warren, '28. But his recent appearance in public print followed an unusual incident: missing a bottom stair in McArthur Court when building lights were out. Sportswriter Lair H. Gregory, ex-'12, compliments the coach explaining "the fracture was caused by the violent contraction of his remarkably developed upper leg muscles." Genial John is 235 pounds of agility, keeps in trim dancing and hammering handballs. Deep in his past is a terpsichorean scholarship to a Los Angeles school rejected upon graduation from Pendleton high. Friend of freshmen, "Honest John's" nick-name aptly describes him.—Ed.

If a poll were to be taken throughout the northwest to determine the most popular man in the section, the chances are 100 to one that the winner would be John A. Warren, otherwise known as "Honest John," present coach of the freshman football, basketball, and baseball teams at Oregon.

Warren has made many friends in practically every Oregon city large enough to support a high school, during the five summers spent as contact-man for the athletic department. There is scarcely a village in the state that greetings and salutations don't ring from all sides when the likeable freshman mentor makes his appearance on its streets.

PENDLETON HOME

Pendleton claims Warren as a native son and it was in 1924 that he left the Round-Up city to make his first appearance at the University. During the four years following his entrance in the institution, he made quite a name for himself as a member of the varsity football team. Upon his graduation in 1928, he went immediately to Astoria, where he remained for the next seven seasons as coach of the major sports.

It was at Astoria that Warren really began to make close friendships with many persons throughout the state. As coach of championship basketball teams he found himself much in demand at athletic banquets, meetings and bull-sessions. His all-time coaching record is one for the books. In the seven years that he coached at Astoria he sent seven basketball teams to the state tournaments. Four times his quintets emerged victorious against the pick of the state. They were runners-up on one occasion and twice finished third.

During his seven-year regime he developed nine all-state players. In 1929 Roland Larson started the parade of Warren-coached all-stars by being named as a member of the mythical all-state quintet. Annually, thereafter, an Astoria player found himself elected to the honor team. Herb Ystad came in 1930, Wally Palmberg, '31; Bob Bergstrom, '32; Averill in '33, Bobby Anet and Ted Sarpola in '34, and again Anet and Sarpola in '35. The latter two went on to Oregon upon graduation from prep school to become famed as members of the 1938 National Intercollegiate Championship basketball team.

Warren answers the old discussion as to which of his Wally and Bob combinations were the best by unhesitatingly naming the Oregon duo of Johansen and Anet as superior to the Oregon State Bergstrom-Palmberg team. "Honest John" points to the great admiration the Web-foot guards had for each other as the key to the superiority over the Beaver pair. Johansen thought Anet was the "greatest ball player in the country" and Anet returned the compliment. This attitude had much to do with the rise of the 1938 Oregon team to national heights, says Warren.

Wally Palmberg gets his high school coach's vote as the greatest individual player he ever handled. Palmberg had the remarkable faculty of knowing exactly where his four team-mates were located on the court at all times during a game.

Thirty-six proteges of Warren's have gone out into collegiate competition and earned their letters on conference squads.

Astoria football teams were consistently on top when Warren was guiding their destinies. In seven years of tough competition his teams won 52, lost 12, and tied 5 times. Although they were never named as all-star teams, two of Astoria's squads went through the season undefeated.

Husky John Warren, '28, allies sectors of state with names of Alumnus residents. His big job: whipping freshman athletes in shape for varsity.

Warren has several times made the comment that for him Christmas has been changed to September 27. His explanation is that since the Atherton ruling was put into effect, and he cannot contact prospects throughout the state, he has no knowledge ahead as to who will form the backbone of his frosh football team. When the day comes around and the students register, Warren gets many surprises in the high school stars that decide to enter Oregon.

COACH'S CHRISTMAS

Christmas was a little late for Warren this year but when it did come, September 30, his surprise package list was sprinkled with former prep school stars. The enrollment of Jim Newquist, Camas, Washington; Inky Boe and Brad Ecklund, Milwaukie touchdown twins; Chuck Elliott and Charles DeAutremont, Eugene; John Saulsberry, Medford; and a host of other flashy football players would give any coach an opportunity to smile. But not Warren; he could have the best material in the country and would still worry about his chances of a successful year.

However John may feel about his chances of moulding a strong team, there are thousands of people in the state that are acquainted with him well enough to know that if a successful season is possible, Warren will accomplish just that.

Codding Picked

Portland Duck club's first Monday noon luncheon was October 1 at the Roosevelt hotel in that city. Newly elected officers include Clarence Codding, president; Dean Vincent, vice-president, and Charles R. Holloway, secretary-treasurer.

These men were elected at an inaugural meeting September 20. The organization includes active Portland men who are interested in University athletics and intercollegiate competition.

Gifts Documented

In the fall of '39, the State Association of University of Oregon Women became recipients of a $250 award from the will of Susan Winter Moore, according to Mrs. Frank L. Chambers of Eugene. The deceased was valedictorian of her normal school class at Oregon in '84 and considered an unusually intelligent co-ed as expressed recently by Darwin Bristow, only surviving member of the class.

Until two years ago the association had two funds operating: the Mary Spiller Fund from which women students borrowed the interest on $5000, and the Luella Clay Carson Fund which allowed loans directly from the $2000 principal. Accumulations from these gifts and dues of the association are being invested until in the near future the group will designate one large fund. The action is withheld pending discovery of a name it shall bear to honor some worthy woman.

Miss Moore, who died in Portland December 23, 1938, was born in Goshen but received all her academic education in Eugene. Following her normal school course she received her B.A. in 1890. Her teaching practice was taken in Baker, Union and Portland. Her brother, Frank L. Moore, B.A. '87, LL.B. '90, was a prominent judge in Baker prior to his death in 1905.

This story is written for documentary purposes and to pay tribute to the association which has taken such an active part in providing loan funds for undergraduate women at Oregon.

Athletes Make History

By JAMES RATHBUN, '41

Current president of Oregon's athletic honorary authors this survey on the organization's past efforts and future plans. High noon, Saturday, November 9, Order of the "O" Alumni will break bread at the Anchorage, scene of training tables for twenty years. Undergraduate members with President Rathbun are planning the program to precede Homecoming's U.C.L.A. football contest on Hayward field. To keep tradition alive, the returning members will sport lettermen sweaters as they tour the track before cheering spectators and reminisce on times that never return save in memories.—Ed.

Eighteen ninety-eight was famed for more than the Spanish-American war. On May 17 of that year the University's Order of the "O" club was founded.

Its avowed purpose from the start was to keep athletics at Oregon on as high a standard as possible. Only men eligible were and still are those who have won their varsity letters in one or more of the major sports: football, baseball, basketball, track or swimming.

Selected carefully and bid only after unanimous consent of active members, the pledges have later proven themselves as Alumni of the University. Today one finds many prominent names in varied fields of work that are linked with Oregon athletics and the organization.

OUTSTANDING LEADERS

Excluding the conditioning and training gained, the big desire of every athlete is to earn a letter in a major sport. Rare it is to achieve the lemon "O" three times in as many terms. J. R. Coleman was the first to gain this honor in 1895. Others who have since done this are Richard Shore Smith, '96, George Hug, '04, Henry McKinney, '06, Oliver Huston, '07, Homer Jamison, '10, Charles Taylor, '11, Donald Dagleish, '16, Dorris Medley, '15, Bill Steers, '20, Hugh Latham, '21, Bill Reinhart, '22, and Homer Dickson, '28.

Leadership means a lot to any organization. Order of the "O" is not excepted. Some of Oregon's outstanding athletes and students have been its presidents: Tony Amato, all-coast guard, '35; Harry McCall, baseball, '34; Bob Smith, all-coast halfback, '39; Dot Medley, all-coast basketball, '20; and Henry Nilsen, all-coast quarterback, '37. These are only a few of the past presidents. All were outstanding athletes and gentlemen on the campus.

This lettermen's group is not merely an athletic club. It also plays an important part in campus life typified by such a recent personality as John Dick, all-American basketball forward last year and also student body president. One of its functions is upholding campus traditions through such celebrations as Junior Weekend. Then its members duck campus males in the senior fountain if they're caught wearing ties, white shoes, or talking to co-eds during the annual picnic. Although amusing, the idea helps sustain traditions.

Another task set before the members is supervising the freshmen in painting the cement "O" on Skinners' butte. Upon completion of the job, the freshmen are led to the Millrace where their annual tug-o'-war with the sophomores takes place. Here friendly riots are policed and life-guards posted to prevent harm to participants in the fun.

TRADITIONS DEVELOPED

An Order of the "O" section at all basketball games aids much in developing organized cheering. The opening day baseball contest is conducted by the lettermen. Then the traditional blarney stone is brought before the Order's rooting section. Each new initiate is forced to kiss the stone and accept hacks as a stimulant for the osculation. In such a way much of the campus spirit is maintained.

Every year the group plans an extensive program for its Alumni. This year a Homecoming luncheon for Oregon's athletic graduates is being developed. The Anchorage, scene of training tables for twenty years, will be the picturesque setting for this get-together at noon Saturday, November 9. From there the Order of "O" Alumni will march to Hayward field and view the U.C.L.A. game.

A winter term dance, a spring term banquet for high school track stars attending the state meet in Eugene are two other activities planned by the fifty-man organization. With the type of men picked for its body, the "O" club should continue to keep its strength in activities and appeal to alumni of today and tomorrow.

President Talks

Larry Hull, ex-'23, Lincoln County Alumni Director, arranged the chamber of commerce assembly in Newport, September 17, to which President Erb spoke on teacher responsibility in an unsettled world. Attending with the president was Elmer Fansett, Alumni Secretary.

Director Hull is also president of the Newport chamber of commerce.

Graphic Prints Features

In the October issue of Survey Graphic, "The Challenge of Crisis," its lead article, is written by Raymond Gram Swing, husband of Betty Gram Swing, ex-'16.

Also, according to Dean Eric Allen of the Journalism School, the second feature is by Jay Cooke Allen, ex-'23, entitled "Refugees and American Defense."

Three-letterman Bill Reinhart, '34, coached for Oregon before taking over similar duties at George Washington university.

Blond-thatched Henry "Hank" Nilsen, '39, presided over Oregon's athletic honorary as an undergraduate, now coaches in Bend.

A Far Eastern Report

By YOSUKE MATSUOKA, LL.B. '00

When the last mail across the Pacific brought me word that I should write something for our college alumni paper, OLD OREGON, of the University of Oregon, I happened to be one of the busiest men in Tokyo. But a call from my old college I looked upon as something demanding obedience. For the thought of Alma Mater conjures up the image of Mother, whom we Japanese are early taught to hold with pious thoughts. Like a dutiful son I sit down and write. And as I do so I feel I could write nothing better than a report on the country to which I belong.

Japan, as you all know, has been waging since July, 1937, the so-termed undeclared war with China. The state of affairs that led to hostilities between the two countries is indeed confusing and its true account will no doubt be given when Clio's ears are no longer dinned with war drummings and her eyes can sweep over the field cleared of powder smoke. It will no doubt be important to look into what brought about this conflict, but it seems even more important for me to tell what we, the people of Japan, are fighting for.

NEW ORDER

To put it simply, the cause to which Japan is now pledged is a new order, a new order of peace and life for all people of the Far East. To this cause all our people are consecrating their efforts, even sacrificing what is closest to their hearts. This cause is now upheld as their national ideal. Its spirit should be the torchlight that throws light on the way that all people of the Far East are to follow. For its light brings hope to the hearts that have been deep in sorrow, hearts of people who have walked in the shadow of the valley of death.

And what is this new order of peace and life? We have just given it a definition: creation of "a sphere of common existence for East Asia." In other words, it will be a sphere in which each nation of East Asia will enjoy the measure of welfare and justice to which it is entitled. And, together, these nations will form one community of life and interests.

This, however, will not be possible unless and until conditions of all these countries are adjusted and rearranged in their common interest. If this new arrangement is to be sound in principle and permanent in character, this sphere of communal life should be peaceful, constructive and above all based on equity. The voices of people therein should be united in one prayer and their minds in affinity of interest. And this sphere is to be built for the Far Eastern countries, some of which have been subject to foreign oppression and others to ruthless or unfair exploitation. Still some others of them have lived in darkness of ignorance and poverty because they could not get either knowledge or justice at the hands of their foreign taskmasters.

Such is the character of the new order program on which Japan is embarked. Japan has taken the leadership because no other nation is capable of doing so.

People of the Far East have been wronged and have suffered, but they were unable to make their voices heard in the council chambers where might only commanded respect or audience.

It may be also noted that Japan's present constructive program is animated by that spirit which the first of our emperors, Jimmu Tenno, proclaimed as the law of the country. It is often called the Way of the Emperor. But it is not by any means any way represented by what the word emperor in its original sense connotes; for it is not the way of a commander or a conqueror. Nor is it the way of an emperor triumphant over success of arms. But it is the way of one who would rule with benevolent heart. The thought that underlies this national principle is that of our first emperor, who said all people under heaven should be looked on as those of one family living under one roof. It is this thought of universal kinship that animates the peaceful edifice that Japan is trying to build for this part of the world.

The spirit of our imperial rule has never been expressed better than when one of our greatest rulers said: "Should any single one of the millions under my care fail to obtain justice I should be to blame." Here is the expression of a mind full of consciousness of responsibility. Here is the testament of a ruler who was solicitous for the welfare of all he had taken under his care. This attitude and this spirit is now held up as the ideal of our country.

NOT ALL IDEALISTS

All this, however, is not to say that all Japanese are equally motivated by such idealism. No nation could be very much better or worse than others. In our midst we find many minds disposed quite otherwise. There are many who cannot conceive armed contest except in terms of conquest or sacrifice in materials, except in gains in kind. Some of them have been dreaming empire upon ruins of towns and countries. And that is natural with those who have been taught in the school of history which reviews the past only as pageants of generals on horseback and monarchs in purple.

But this school of thought does not prevail in Japan at this moment. It is foreign to the state council chamber which plans our undertaking and shapes the course of national endeavor.

The East that has often been accused of being static is swinging into a new pace. The East now demands what it has not done for ages: a chance to build its own house and a chance to live its own life under the new order born of its own mind.

Our undertaking has often been criticized abroad. Because of this undertaking we have lost the sympathy of those people whose friendship and opinion we valued most. We have not been deaf to voices raised in our condemnation. But we remain steadfast to our purpose because we know its true quality. We feel we have been wrongfully charged and condemned before the bar of international opinion. But we remain faithful to

Itinerary of Foreign Minister Matsuoka's career is spent to America in 1892; was graduated from Oregon service, '02; elevated to consul at Shanghai, '04; third secretary to Japanese legation, Brussels, '07; as general, Mukden, '11; second secretary, embassy, Washington department foreign office, '17; secretary to Foreign Minister Terauchi, '18; member, Japanese delegation to Paris peace conference, '19; consul-general, Canton, '20-21; director, South Manchuria Railway, '28; joined Seiyukai party, '30; elected member, House of Representatives, '32; chief delegate, plenary session, League of Nations, '33; president of South Manchuria railway, '35-'39; July,

Scrap-iron embargoes and a triple alliance make tense moments today for Japanese and American diplomatic leaders. Relationships seem strained but still exist. In this strange circumstance, the University plays a peculiar role. It educated Yosuke Matsuoka, LL.B. '00, who molds Japan's affairs from his Tokyo office as Foreign Minister. Page six pictures Japan's policy—a "scoop" for OLD OREGON—through the eyes of Matsuoka. Page seven portrays that man through the verbal brushes of Minoru Yasui, '37, LL.B. '39, now with the Japanese Consulate General in Chicago. Phi Beta Kappa keyman Yasui presents his personal impressions as an admirer of the illustrious alumnus. Minister Matsuoka, whose steps to success read like a chart of Japan's foreign office staff, presents the public policies of Premier Prince Fumimaro Konoye's government. Disturbing as the policy conflict is between United States and Japan, an amicable solution is possible with Yosuke Matsuoka guiding the destinies of his country's foreign affairs. These articles, made newsworthy by their authors, are neither condemned nor condoned in content by OLD OREGON.—Ed.

Illustrious Alumnus

By MINORU YASUI, '37, LL.B. '39

Being a Japanese by race, I am naturally proud to acclaim Yosuke Matsuoka, Japan's new Foreign Minister, as a fellow alumnus of the University of Oregon Law School, and as my ultimate superior in the Japanese foreign service. Although he was graduated from the Law School in 1900, many years before I had even been born, it gives me a feeling of akinship to realize that he had attended the same school and had struggled through the same incomprehensible intricacies of the law as I.

My impressions of Matsuoka are, for the most part, second-hand; what I have been told by my parents and what I have read about him. However, in April, 1933, it was a real thrill for me actually to see and hear the man who was then spoken of as "the coming man of Japan." He was returning from the League of Nations Assembly at Geneva, from which he had dramatically withdrawn, and had stopped in Portland, to visit the scenes of his early youth.

I was fortunate enough to have the opportunity to hear him speak at the Benson Tech auditorium and although I was only a high school student then, I was deeply impressed by the aggressiveness and dynamic force of Matsuoka. I thought then that I should like to follow his footsteps, and with him as an ideal, to devote myself to the destiny of my country as he to his, and remembering our mutual Japanese heritage and American environment strive towards a permanent rapprochement between Japan and the United States.

PERSONALIZED IMPRESSIONS

Hence, my impressions of Matsuoka are highly personalized. With a feeling of "that's my fellow alumnus," I recall him as a forceful, quick-acting, fluently-speaking diplomat, whose motivating principle was to formulate a constructive program and execute it forthwith. My dad then told me that undoubtedly some day Matsuoka would become the Prime Minister of Japan, whose dynamic personality would make Japan a dominant figure in world affairs. In view of the recent trends in the Orient, it is possible that my father's prophecy will yet be fulfilled.

Let us look at Matsuoka's present position, the environment in which he grew up to manhood, and the relationship that environment will undoubtedly play in the future policies of the Japanese Empire.

Foreign Minister Matsuoka, now in the all-powerful inner circle of the Japanese cabinet, holds a key position in controlling the future relations between the United States and Japan. He has the sympathy of the Imperial Japanese Army, and his influence in the Konoye cabinet is great. Because of the trend towards centralized unification of Japanese politics, and because of unswerving determination to create a new order in Asia, it may be feared by Americans that Matsuoka will exert his power to the detriment of the United States.

However, I believe, humble though my opinion may be, that in the conduct of the foreign policies of the Japanese government, he will exercise his influence and prerogatives in a typically American manner, directly without sham or subterfuge, aggressively, and with a conviction of righteousness. He will conduct the foreign policies of Japan not only for the benefit of Japan, but for the permanent good of all nations in the Pacific area.

I am convinced that his early experiences as a youth in America, as a schoolboy in Oregon, will unquestionably influence his present-day policies and decisions. Admittedly, his heritage is purely Japanese in tradition, but he has an excellent Western education grafted on to that stock of native genius. His early American training has endowed him with the gift of clear vision, and the admixture of Japanese heritage and American environment has produced an universal, statesmanlike outlook.

AMERICAN STEP-SON

It might be regarded as somewhat presumptuous to draw an analogy, but I feel that a little story of Matsuoka's life might clarify what I mean. When Matsuoka arrived in Portland, Oregon, in 1892, he arrived there as an immigrant waif, lonely and ignorant. Isabelle Dunbar Beveridge took that 13-year-old lad into her home and loved him as a son. Today, Matsuoka's feeling for Mrs. Beveridge is carved into a beautiful stone marker over her grave: "Raised by the loving hands of Yosuke Matsuoka, in token of the lasting gratitude for the sympathy and gentle kindness of a woman, who, next to his mother, shaped his mind and character."

If the analogy may be drawn, it might be said that Matsuoka has a similar strong heart-tie with the United States. Although he loves his native country best, his mother land, he has a deep sentiment for his foster country, the land that took him to her heart. Hence, despite the critical tension developing between the United States and Japan, there is some hope that a former Portland schoolboy, a University of Oregon law graduate, may yet reconcile the differences between this country and Japan by a constructive and amicable basis.

And so, whether or not we can agree with the policies which Matsuoka expounds, whether or not we admire the progress of the Empire of Japan, we must frankly admit that the University of Oregon may well be proud of such a son as Matsuoka, who started life as a lonely immigrant waif and has now attained the stature of a world statesman. The early school life of Matsuoka undoubtedly influences the Matsuoka of today, and hence it may be truthfully said that the teachings and training of the University of Oregon now influence the conduct of Japan in world diplomacy.

May we fervently hope and pray that Matsuoka's early experiences in America, and the training of the University will exert influence sufficient to cause the adoption of an equitable and constructive policy which will re-establish cooperative and friendly relations between the United States and Japan to the mutual benefit of not only them but all nations.

the spirit that gives us strength and sustains us in these none too cheerful times and we feel that we may bide our time because we know "counsels to which Time hath not been called, Time will not ratify."

In the meantime the construction of a new East Asia must go on. The present is only an ad interim report on the work, the best part of which still remains to be achieved. But this report is sent over because I believe any work on which seventy million people can unite and in which they can place faith is worthy of attention. It is my pious prayer that it will not be long before I can report again and say, "Behold, here is what my country has built. It's our own achievement and it's our desire fulfilled."

History of the University of Oregon

BY DR. HENRY D. SHELDON

This is the story of a whole host of Mr. Chips. A series of epochal struggles. You who think you know your University will be amazed, amused and informed, when you have read this "human document."

It is literally a panorama of "human vignettes." The chapter on Colonel John Leader and the war years of 1917 and 18, is itself worth the price of this unusual book.

And WHO, we ask, is better qualified to write about the school we love so dearly, than our own revered Dr. Henry (Shelly) Sheldon? From the turn of the century Dr. Sheldon has been a moving and dynamic spirit behind the scenes, as well as in the class room. He has served under five college presidents, has seen the student body grow from four hundred to nearly four thousand. He has known personally nearly all the men and women who contributed most generously to the promulgation of learning and culture. His story of the University is something far more than a history; it is the stirring saga of pioneer folk creating for themselves and posterity a shrine, dedicated to a magnificent idea—"mens agatat molem."
